Daniel Webster. In your paper, writes a correspondent to a Richmond journal, you alluded to Mr. Webster's great speech on the 5th of October, 1840, "under the October sun," as he expressed it, and I beg leave to furnish you with an anecdote of that occasion, which, in my opinion, reflects oredit upon the feelings and opinions of Mr. Webster, and upon his memory. I was the president of the "Tippecanoe and Tyler Too" Club, and being happily also upon very cordial terms with Mr. Webster, who was a man of large heart as well as head, in preparing for the convention which was to assemble, I per formed my duty and gratified my feelings by inviting Mr. Webster to come and address it. The Fredericksburg train at that time arriv The Fredericksburg train at that time arrived at the Broad street depot about 12 o'clock in the day. On that day it was a long way behind time. I remained there waiting for Mr. Webster, as did the immense crowd, which filled the street, until after two o'clock, when I stepped across to my home on Marshall street to get a little refreshment. Before I returned the cars arrived. Mr. Webster remained in the car until I came. When we met he told me he had not gone out, because he was a total stranger, and he did not think it proper, more over, to present himself until I came. The club had expressly required me to carry him to a public house as the guest of the club and not to my own house. When I brought him cu. to my own house. When I brought him cu. of the car to carry him to the Powhatan House. then the best hotel in the city, he refused to be put in a hack, but took my arm and walked down through the shouting throng to the hotel. Trembling with excitement, he said to me : "Lyons, you have brought me here, and you know the danger of bringing 'Black Dan' to the south of the Potomac." I replied, "I'll take all the consequences on my part if 'Black Dan' will only do his part." When we arrive ! at the hotel, as we went up stairs, he said : "1 had no idea of this, I supposed that nobody but Mr. Clay could bring out such a crowd I answered, "I always told you that the streets was still shouting and calling for Mr. Webster. He asked me what he should do-if he should make a speech. I told him not to make a speech; our people never heard political speeches on Sunday; but he must go out and see the people and let them see him, and speak the next day. Well, he said : "Come along," and we went out on the piazza in front of the hotel, and after making a bow he said: "I can not speak to you this evening. Virginians are not in the habit of listening to political speech. es on Sunday; but I have come down here to see you and talk to you, and hereafter I will speak to you whenever and wherever you please." It was my duty as president of the olub to deliver Mr. Webster at the Caritel to the Committee of Arrangements, of which my friend, the late Wm. 11. McFarland, was chair our people were just and patriotic as well as hospitable, and would receive you as cordially as they would Mr. Clay." We went into the parlor of the hotel, and the crowd which filled

Accordingly on Monday, at the proper hour, I drove down to the Powhattan House, to take Mr. Webster over. He sent for me up to bis chamber. When I knocked at his chamber door the reply was, "come in," and I entered. I found Mr. Webster in his shirt sleeves prepariog to put on his cravat. After the u-ual salutations, Mr. Webster shook out his crava'. a three-cornered white one, and then playfully said: "Well, Lyons, now you've got me down here, tell me what I am to talk about?" I replied, "It is rather ludicrous, Mr. Webster, to ask me, or anybody else, to tell you what you are to talk about; but as you have opened the door, I will enter. I want you to tell these people what are your opinions upon the troublesom question of abolition." As he folded his cravat upon his knee, he replied: "I have no new opinions upon that subject; my opinions are the same now as they have been for thirty years, and may be found in my public speeches." I said ; "That is all true, but although you have thousands, protably ten thousand, of the clite of the young men and middle aged men of Virginia in this crowd. there are, of course, a vast number who have never read, nor ever will read, your speeches; and I want them to be able to go home and say to their friends and neighbors that they heard Mr. Webster, with their own ears, assert and defend the constitutional rights of the Sou h. "Well," said he, "they shall do it, I will speak to them so that they shall hear with their own ears, and tell their countrymen that I do main tain and defend the constitutional rights of the South, as of all other parts of the country.' He tied on his cravat and I carried him over to the south porch of the Capitol and presented him to the committee, and he made there his famous speech without a note of any kind to that "sea of upturned faces," as he styled them. which so delighted and electrified them that when he had concluded the passage to which I have alluded, with one voice they cried out, "Again, agaic," and he repeated it. How up fortunate for the peace of the country and con stitutional liberty that the words of this great man were not hecded. That speech, I believe, mainly contributed to run up the Whig vote in Virginia, for the first time in her history, to within thirteen hundred of a majority.
